Art Unit: 1623

The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 24-32, 43-53 and 64 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Cham et al (Cancer Letters, 55 (1990) 221-225).

Cham et al disclose a composition comprising glycoalkaloids (BEC) useful for treating cancer (page 221). Cham et al further disclose that rhamnose inhibits the efficacy of BEC and that the aglycone solasodine is not effective against murine S180 (page 221). Thus, a person having ordinary skill in the art at the time of the present invention would have been motivated to remove rhamnose and aglycones from the BEC composition in order to improve efficacy of BEC.

Claims 30, 31, 51 and 52 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Cham et al (Cancer Letters, 55 (1990) 221-225) in view of Daniels et al (U.S. Patent No. 4,053,591).

Cham et al disclose that aglycone solasodine is not effective against murine S189. Thus a person having ordinary skill in the art at the time the claimed invention was made would have been motivated to remove aglycones from the composition disclosed by Cham et al using conventional chloroform purification process disclosed by Daniels et al (column 14, lines 50-52).

Applicant's arguments filed December 3, 2007 have been fully considered but they are not persuasive.

Applicant contends that the rhamnose discussed in the Cham et al paper is not a degradation product of BEC in the composition being used but is in fact added to the BEC composition. Applicant further contends that Cham et al teach that the BEC composition without the addition of rhamnose is effective at ensuring survival of all the tested animals. Thus there is no motivation to further purify BEC. These arguments have not been found persuasive. At the time the claimed invention was made rhamnose was known to effect the efficacy of BEC. The degradation of BEC, which results in free rhamnose, occurs over time. Thus, it is not clear how much, if any rhamnose was present in the composition tested by Cham et al. Further, since Cham et al disclose that rhamnose affects efficacy of BEC, a person having ordinary skill in the art at the time the claimed invention was made would have been motivated to remove rhamnose, whether the rhamnose resulted from addition, degradation or any other source. Also, Cham et al discloses that solasodine is no effective against murine S189. Thus, a person having ordinary skill in the art at the time the claimed invention was made would have been motivated to remove solasodine, which was known to have no efficacy. It is generally acknowledged that it is desirable for the active component in the pharmaceutical composition to be as pure as possible. Thus, the removal of degradation product in a pharmaceutical composition, in order to further purify a pharmaceutical composition, would have been prima facie obvious to a person having ordinary skill in the art at the time the claimed invention was made.
